his army into Austria and accomplished the "Anschluss", he paid a visit to Hitler and published an appeal to the Austrian people urging them to accept with joy the reattachment to the German "motherland" and to vote accordingly in the plebiscite organized by the Nazis. He held close personal contact with the German "Gauleiter", Joseph Buerkel. The Vatican Radio rebuked him sharply stating that in Austria all was lost, even the honor. He was asked to come to Rome to explain himself and after his return to Vienna he again changed his attitude and now tried to join the line of the German episcopate in protesting the anti-Church measures taken by the Nazi government.
